Horse Was There.

The drawing teacher recently used a small toy horse as a model for the first-grade drawing lesson. She was walking down the aisle and watching the progress of the pupils when she came to Bob, who had drawn a different object. "Why, Bob," she asked, "what have you drawn?" "A barn," said Bob. "But why didn't you draw the horse?" "Can't you see," said Bob disgustedly, "the horse is in the barn?"

"HALF A ROGUE"

Red Feather production. It is estimated that about 50 per cent of the readers of English in the United States have read Harold McGrath's famous story, "Half a Rogue," which made a record even for "best seller," when it appeared. Certainly everyone who enjoyed the book will enjoy the filmization of it still more. In the leading role is the Universal's oldest star, King Baggot. A remarkable cast was chosen to support him, including Edna Hunter and Clara Byers, who contrasted roles which they handled with their usual skill.

SATURDAY—"The Wedding Guest." Harry Carey and Olive Fuller Golden in this Bison drama. Matinee open 1:30 to 5 p. m. Night show on 7:30 to 11 p. m. Five reels every day. The Universal service first run pictures. Tonight is doll night. Don't forget your coupons.

GOT THROUGH WITH MESSAGE

How Brave Cossack Officer Carried Communication Which Was of Vital Importance to Commanders.

The invention of wireless telegraphy has done away with much of the old-time dispatch sending which was so picturesque a feature of previous wars. Often when two friendly armies are separated by a force of the enemy it is a matter of defeat or victory that a means of communication shall be opened between them. Thousands of brave men have lost their lives in performing this temporary war postal service.

During the Russo-Japanese war an officer of Cossacks offered to carry a dispatch which ten horsemen had already failed to get through.

"The others have failed," the officer insisted, "because they traveled on horseback. I shall go under my horse."

"Under your horse?" the general exclaimed. But he accepted the offer of the volunteer. Whereupon the Cossack officer received the communication, said his prayers, bade good-by to his men and started off in the middle of the night strapped face downward beneath his horse, which he guided by means of passing the reins between the forelegs of the horse. The Japanese outposts whistled to what they thought was a riderless horse, but did not shoot at it when it did not heed them. The animal, driven on by kicks from the officer's heels, accomplished the journey of 20 miles in safety. On the following night the officer returned as he had gone.

When Lieutenant Gilmore, an officer of our navy, was captured by the Filipinos during the insurrection 14 years ago he sent news of his whereabouts through the Filipino lines by a Spanish prisoner who had been liberated. Naturally all such persons were carefully searched. But the insurgent officers had failed to examine the bamboo walking staff of the Spaniard. This end had been opened, the written message inserted and a cork was fitted into the hole again, which also rendered the paper safe from water.

CAME AS RESULT OF CHANCE

Possibilities of Illuminating Gas Revealed to Irish Clergyman in a Few Moments of Abstraction.

When Philadelphia was an infant town a few years old, Dr. John Clayton, the dean of Kildare, sat meditating before a fire. He put a piece of coal in his pipe and held it above the blaze. In a short time a tiny blue flame came from the pipe. And so illuminating gas was born!

The death in this city of John McIlhenny brings up the history of gas, as the death of Cyrus Field made everyone think of the ocean cable. Mr. McIlhenny was the grand old pioneer in gas. He saw it develop from its early infancy in America and saw it push the oil lamp off the table.

He beheld this same agency shove anthracite out of over 240,000 cook stoves in Philadelphia. Once I saw this veteran sitting at dinner beside Samuel T. Bodine, president of the world's most potential gas company. "Glad" writes in the Philadelphia Ledger.

The first gas lamp in any street in the world flashed out in Pall Mall, London, the same year that Robert Fulton took his famous steamboat up the Hudson.

But it was many years after that before gas became a common thing in London, although a few streets had been so lighted.

Tradition has it that one of the novelties of the famous ball given by the Duchess of Richmond on the eve of Waterloo was a ballroom illuminated by gas.

There was no gas in the executive mansion for the first seven presidents of the United States, and perhaps more, as this country was a bit slow in seizing the new illuminant.
